

Michael Howard was born into the foster care system. After his biological family disowned him at Rhode Island hospital, he spent four and half years living in different foster care homes. Some of them had up to fifteen foster children living under one roof. With a little bit of luck and the grace of God he found his new mother and started his new life, new identity, and new name. Mr. Howard is a proud product of the New Haven public school system who graduated from Hyde Leadership High School in 2006. Mr. Howard attended Gateway Community College and graduated with an associate degree in 2011 and went on to further his education at Southern CT University with a Bachelor Degree in Interpersonal Communication, which is something, that never crossed his mind while attending high school. Last year Mr. Howard enjoyed his first year as a teacher at Coop Arts High School in New Haven, where he taught TV production and film witting to sophomore and seniors. Now Mr. Howard is a college instructor, and is case manager at Gateway Community college working with students with autism. Mr. Howard is also the executive producer and host of his own local talk show called "Mike Nice Talk of Talk Show" on Citizens TV. For ten years he has been speaking to some of today's iconic, influential people like Russell Simmons, Danny Glover, New Haven Mayor Toni Harp, boxer Chad Dawson,. Misty Copeland, first African American soloist ballerina, CEO, Linda McMahon and last person to interview Dr. Maya Angelou week before she died. He has come a long way and realizes that each one of us is the C.E.O of our own education and although we all go through different paths, nothing is impossible. When Mr. Howard isn't busy with school and conducting his show, he loves to run, play basketball, swim, roller skate and going to the movies and is addicted to Popeye's Chicken. Mr. Howard next step is to be the next Oprah!
